A TIA seminar

The development and challenges of organic agriculture in South Korea

Professor Kim Jong-Sook
Visiting Research Fellow, Tasmanian Institute of Agriculture
Professor, Korean National College of Agriculture and Fisheries

Professor Kim studied agricultural economics in Korea (Jeonbuk National University) and then completed her Masters and PhD in Japan. Prof Kim then returned to Korea to work as a research fellow at the Institute of Korean Rural Economy in Seoul.

Professor Kim was part of the Agricultural Technology Evaluation Committee, involved in the Korean government’s agricultural policy development, particularly for environmentally friendly agriculture. She was the chairman of the Korean Society of Organic Agriculture from 2009–2010.

Professor Kim currently lectures on organic agriculture at the Korean National College of Agriculture and Fisheries, a government institution for the training of young farmers.
